I can shoot faster because I don't have to stop to shoot macro every time a subject moves 3 feet and I can use a remote trigger to set the camera to shoot as well. I don't have to stop to change lenses either, so I don't have to deal with the dreaded "change-of-angle shake" issue all of the time. Live view on the camera is very cool with no viewfinder. It could just direct you where to point the camera. You don't have to stop and move to adjust film advance either, so you can shoot long exposures without stopping. Now you can drag the photo into a folder without disturbing the photo's metadata. Editing an image in Photoshop 2010 is a breeze! You can conveniently organize your images according to the way you like, and make corrections to all or part of your images at once. Next time you're repairing your damaged photos, you can use Photoshop's Undo command to reverse multiple steps in a single function. You can also preserve a location pointer to a spot inside a layer so you can return to it later. New Photomerge tools now let you create panoramic shots from a collection of images taken with any camera. New Guided Edit includes a collection of guided tips and options. In addition, the Content Aware Fill tool now intelligently fills gaps in images. So you're taking new photos for your social networks, and you want to put them into your Facebook albums right away. Now you can drag and drop your images into your Facebook album with the new drag and drop integration between Photoshop and Facebook.
