To be honest, it wasn't the best experience for me because (a) Apple didn't give day-of tickets (only really the day before, or, if you're lucky, by e-mail on the evening before) and (b) because the event was held in an arena where the audio was so bad, I could scarcely hear a sound on stage besides "Thank you!!!" There was a live feed of the experience through Facebook Live, but you could barely hear it, and hearing it in the first place was difficult because of the overly brassy Apple Expo design. I found that I only wanted to watch the event on the YouTube feed. Another big re-design, this one a major one. New looks, new friend-flags, a new dock scheme, new login screens, and more. macOS Mojave's brand-new look and feel is also reflected here—the Mac's desktop environment is being updated with a desktop metaphor and a dark mode, a first for macOS. In what's been a growing trend—at least in the Slate photo app—new feature-sets are regularly being added to more recent versions of Photoshop. PS CC/Elements 13 added the Filter Gallery (should have called it the Art Gallery), PS CC/Elements 14 added Smart Objects, PS CC/Elements 15 limited Photoshop to a single window, and PS CC/Elements 16 added Babylon (which allows you to "play with numbers more easily").
