On the street side, Lightroom has found its way to Android. So if you're out and about, you can use your smartphone or tablet with confidence as you shoot photos, start editing them, and share the final images with friends. Nevertheless, the new Script feature of the content-aware fill tool is a useful way to fill in areas where two or more images overlap. In other words, you can, in this example, create a smooth transition between the edges of the whales and the clouds. In the left image, I applied the content-aware fill tool. I also duplicated the whales and filled in the gaps. I then adjusted their opacity so the whales are more visible. The result is an image that was much easier to paint into. The info panel was next on my list to test. I found this to be a very useful tool, especially when I came across a time lapse. In the panel you can see the camera settings and while shooting. This eliminates the need to press a shutter release button, fewer camera settings, and it also allows you to stop the footage mid way down. You can even add slides before or after it. The remove background tool is another unique feature included in the "Remix" version. If you add an image to the clipping mask of an image, the background of the image will disappear and the image will become a collage. The image above uses a layer mask. The mask contains the finished weathering results. It creates an irregular surface, but, as mentioned before, you won't see the image editor disappear. A powerful tool, but one that needs to be used with caution.
