Two weeks after winning the Australian Primary Industries Kangaroo Packer title, having ridden the injured asset in two of his seven rides, it seems Paul K. H. Henson is now set for a six-month lay-off after suffering a fractured skull in a paddock accident. It is not known if the accident occurred at the Rennie Valley Pty Limited, which he bought into last year or if it occurred at another Henson asset, Beaufort Station, which he took over earlier this year. A: The problem is 4.3. PRINTER DR-2580C: Diagramm- und Organtente The only way I think is to convert the PDF to bitmap. You could use (for example) Tesseract. By the way, here is a question regarding the same problem (and quite similar, although with a different scanner): ("$7.00"); } } } } A: Your controller action assumes that no other HTTP request is in progress, that is, it would only run if the user initiates a new request. However you are performing a redirect, or at least I assume that's what is happening because you are returning `StatusCode 302` instead of returning a `200` and creating a `Location` header. Since you are returning a `302` you can't assume that any other activity with the client will be aborted. In other words, your first assumption is not correct and you will have to keep track of the previous request yourself. Redirecting will also mean that any information you have in the `Request` object, such as `HTTP` headers, will be lost as they were not kept after the redirect. If you could trigger the redirect by some other means I suggest the following code (I created a template for illustrative purposes and removed anything not pertinent, such as using the `Json` method):

string redirectUrl = ControllerContext.RouteData.GetRequiredString("redirect"); Response.StatusCode = 302; // or whatever you are returning. return Redirect(redirectUrl);

You should then be able to detect the previous request being aborted and perform the log-in yourself, for instance by checking for a user id in the `Session` variable. The solution depends on how you want to implement it, however. If this solution does not work for you and you don't want to
