The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for molding or forming a protective coating on optical fibers. Optical fibers are light conducting strands consisting essentially of transparent glass or plastic materials. Today, optical fibers are being increasingly used in a variety of applications, such as, for example, in the transmission of voice, video and data signals over long distances. The fibers are designed to carry information at higher data rates than conventional cables due to their long length, low weight, and high bit rate. Optical fibers are produced by an extrusion process in which a glass material is pushed through a spinneret to form individual fibers. The fibers are subsequently drawn by a drawing apparatus which can draw a substantial length of fiber from a melt in a glass tank and allows the fibers to be wound on a bobbin. A single fiber can be drawn as much as 3,000 to 4,000 feet from the spinneret. The drawn fiber may then be coated or covered with a polymer coating to protect the glass material of the fiber from environmental exposure and/or surface contamination. The polymer coating is designed to protect the fiber from abrasion, chemical attack, and other external phenomena which can potentially degrade or destroy the optical characteristics of the fiber. Some protective coating materials become brittle when subjected to heat, particularly when high temperatures are maintained over extended periods of time. For example, exposure to a temperature of approximately 400.degree. F. for a lengthy period of time can

One example is the so called \*empirical density function\* [raftery:empiricalDensity]. It is used in context of Bayesian data analysis or statistical modelling (see for example [McGrayne:BDA]).  $\backslash(\backslash ; (-1.0,-0.1) - (1.3,-0.1) ; (0,-0.4) - (0,0.1) ; \text{plot}\{id=qqplot\} \text{coordinates} [(0.7,0.3) (0.2,0.4)]\{\}; (-0.5,-0.1) \text{node}\{text width=3cm\} [\text{Fourier transform of the correlation function}]\{\}; (1.0,-0.1) - (1.0,-1.0); (-1.0,0.3) - (1.0,0.3) ; (-1.0,0.3) \text{node}\{text width=3cm\} [\text{Correlation} ]\{\};$  For a general theory of the empirical density function see [raftery:empiricalDensity] and for an overview of different approaches to be used for the intensity function see [aas:Intensity]. Note that the distribution function as proposed in [Aas:MFISSM] \*implements\* the construction of an empirical distribution of a finite set of data. This was not shown in the paper, but there are no problems with the implementation. However, 0cc13bf012
