To do this I can either; Increase the number of threads I am using in code. Use Parallel.ForEach() - which I hope will create a thread for each processor core, but this has not been my experience. What I do see is that Parallel.ForEach() can be set to run in parallel mode - but this does not always create threads to run in parallel. I am coding in C# v4.0. Any help is greatly appreciated. Otherwise, you have to decide how many threads for a single thread to be executing, and then how many threads to execute in parallel. Parallel is useful because it makes it easier to optimize work distribution for the hardware - for example, if you have a hard drive there are 32 threads you can execute in parallel (2 threads per 3e33713323
