The above-described problems generally occur in a distributed memory environment such as a cluster system. An object of the present invention is to provide a data processing system with a function of determining a failure, which occurs in a processor executing a program in a distributed memory environment, and predicting the failure that will occur, so as to prevent other processors from going into a state where they cannot operate. Another object of the present invention is to provide a distributed memory environment that prevents a program itself from waiting for a network or a processor other than itself when the program executes a system call. The object indicated above is accomplished by the provision of a data processing system comprising a processor executing a program in a distributed memory environment; and a failure prediction unit determining a failure that has occurred in the processor, and predicting a type of the failure, wherein the failure prediction unit predicts a first failure where the program executing the program is in a deadlocked state of waiting for a network, and predicts a second failure where the program is in a deadlocked state of waiting for an execution result of a system call, while changing the program execution states, and a failure prediction unit checks a failure that has occurred in the program and predicts the type of the failure, wherein when the failure prediction unit detects a first failure, the failure prediction unit prevents the program from executing the system call, and when the failure prediction unit detects a second failure, the failure prediction unit allows the program to execute the system call, and the failure prediction unit predicts the type of the failure by performing arithmetic operations on random numbers. Another object of the present invention is to provide a distributed memory environment that prevents a program itself from waiting for a network or a processor other than itself when the program executes a system call. The object indicated above is accomplished by the provision of a distributed memory environment comprising a data processing unit having a failure prediction unit to predict a failure that will occur in the data processing unit, wherein the failure prediction unit predicts a first failure where the program is in a deadlocked state of waiting for a network, and predicts a second failure where the data processing unit is in a deadlocked state e79caf774b

Multiple myeloma is a clinical entity that is frequently resistant to treatment and refractory to intermittent therapy. Multiple myeloma is usually a slow, insidious disease for which there is no cure. New chemotherapeutic agents have recently been introduced into the treatment regimens, including thalidomide, arsenic trioxide, and bortezomib. Thalidomide is a glutamic acid analogue and interferes with cytokine metabolism. Arsenic trioxide induces apoptosis by inhibiting the enzyme of the enzyme system involved in the formation of arsenic trioxide. Bortezomib is a boron-containing compound that inhibits the protease responsible for the processing of ubiquitinated proteins
