Q: BigQuery Hbase UDF to extract row/column name and format of the column I have used the get_row() and get_column() UDFs, but it throws error in "Not_applicable" state i.e my data is still in MySQL format. Is there any way I can extract column name and format of a column? Also is there any way to extract column name of a row, from its actual row id? A: See this. It seems to handle the "Not_applicable" state but it did not print the column names. As a cast member, Jeremy Piven will see the following rewards: Jeremy Piven will receive personal recognition on the Mos Eisley Cantina Charms Table in Bantha's Landing Jeremy Piven will receive a commemorative Imperial Academy Commendation Card Jeremy Piven will receive a private tour of the Rebel Base Docking Bay, section 16 Private tour access limited to select guests for Wed. And it's about 29% more efficient than the average two-wheeler. ~~~ veridies The efficiency comparison seems a little bit odd. The article states that it has a 24 HP motor, but the title and the photo say that it has a 25 HP motor. Are there 24 vs. 25 HP motors? How can that be accurate? ~~~ joezydeco Just call it a 29% more efficient motorcycle. In all the hoopla over petrol 'economy' cars, it's amazing that the efficiency of the Chinese motorcycle industry has remained where it is. The amount of capacity they're achieving in a motorcycle is just ridiculous. Q: How to get a message from a bash function in Python 3.4? I'm trying to create a function in bash which will take an input and then sends it to python. This is what I've created so far: function take_input() { echo " bff6bb2d33

The Best Final Fantasy Game I Ever Played Is Told Through Three Colors

The previous quote from Japanese FINAL FANTASY fan is absolutely incredible! I hope you will read it and enjoy it as much as I did.

Watanuki - Final Fantasy

"O---O

After watching the Final Fantasy: Type-0 trailers, I realized my last Final Fantasy game is The Best.
