According to Steinberg, the GrooveBox should be able to play any instrument and most of the time, it can play anything very easily. It is also easy to modulate the speed of an instrument and let the other instruments play at normal speed (which is not always possible on other VST instruments). To use the GrooveBox, you open the VST plugin and select which instrument you want to use. You can select from various models. The default model is a keyboard, but you can also use the GrooveBox on a guitar or bass guitar or an acoustic guitar or a keyboard. When you launch the plugin, it starts to play back the instrument and you can play with the velocity sensitive pads. The current version of GrooveBox is 0.5. They typically act by destroying cancerous cells through a process known as antibody-dependent cellular cytotoxicity (ADCC). ADCC is used in treatments for cancer, such as in multiple myeloma, and to prevent graft-versus-host disease in patients receiving transplants of bone marrow, blood or other tissues. It is believed that ADCC is mediated by the binding of an antibody to a target cell. The target cell binds to an Fc region of the antibody, resulting in crosslinking of two or more target cells through Fc receptors (FcR) on their surface. This interaction is often sufficient to induce death of the target cells. An antibody that binds to a soluble antigen may be used to induce an ADCC response. Target cells that express a Fc receptor are then able to bind to this antibody and induce crosslinking of the Fc
