Multilanguage.Seventeen members of the crew of a sunken American ship have survived nearly eight weeks underwater, three of them in a partially submerged cabin, during their perilous voyage home to Florida. On Thursday, searchers from the US Coast Guard, the Navy and Florida agencies found the sole survivor of the Silver Star, an 84-foot Cape Canaveral-based vessel which had been broken in two by an explosion the same day in 2007. The ship sank after colliding with a barge last week in the Indian River near Melbourne, Fla., dragging 16 sailors from a depth of about 56 feet, some under water. "The Silver Star is still in the water," said Petty Officer 2nd Class Adam Hermann, a spokesman for the US Coast Guard's 7th District in Miami, where the search for the missing sailors is being conducted. "I think they found the survivor by now." The rescue teams had been looking for a signal from a pinger -- the onboard alarm that should have been activated if anyone had been in the partially submerged cabin. On Thursday, they found a small "ping" signal that indicated someone
