Boundaries From 1541, at the Union of the Crowns, until 1868, the Scottish Parliament comprised two sub-Parliaments, the Scottish Commons and the Scottish Lords, which were in turn based on the counties. This reflected the historic county boundaries of the shire counties, based on the Scottish Marches. The Scottish Borders constituency was one of the two constituencies for the Scottish Commons from 1290. For the 1885 general election, the Scottish elections were redrawn, the smaller constituencies were abolished and replaced by a new larger Scottish counties. The Scottish Borders County was divided between two constituencies, one in the Central Scotland area, and the other in the Selkirkshire area. The Local Government (Scotland) Act 1889, which came into effect in the ensuing year, reduced the number of county councils by one, and in the Borders created a new Southern Division, a large area of Midlothian, East Lothian, and Peebles, which was in turn divided into East Lothian, Midlothian and Peebles. In this redistribution, the Scottish Borders area was divided as follows: This arrangement had been in place until the Redistribution of Seats Act 1885. At the 1918 general election, the boundaries were redrawn once again, to avoid malapportionment of seats. The Unionist candidate, Lord Somerville, fought the seat as a constituency.
