Write an expression that represents this ratio, taking the positive part. How to link the first-order derivative of a function to its second derivative. Write an expression that represents this ratio, taking the positive part. It will run the set three times and in a certain order (which I don't want to specify in advance). For each time it runs, I'd like to output a single row from the CSV file, which would be the header row from the CSV file. This would be the header row. A: I think your premise is wrong: It's not good practice to work from one file to another in R. Instead you should just define your problem and then find out how to solve it. For your specific problem this means that you should first decide what your data looks like, which in your case is the header. You could do this by looking at the second column. Maybe this is the number of times the window is run (in which case it's the index). Maybe the index is there as well. A simple example will illustrate: df1
