Download latest Mp3 Mp3 songs of MALAYALAM including videos and Hindi. Watch movie online. www.kallamart.com Tuesday, October 1, 2018 From a "Muslim" father to a "Sikh" mother, a daughter is struggling to find her place. When she finds it, it's the last thing she expected. A few hours before going to the place of worship I have done this one hundred times, I feel an odd mix of apprehension and frustration. Will the hate I often encounter in the streets change my mind? I arrive at the Sikh community centre and take a small trolley to the place of worship. Is this my last chance? I am bracing myself for a barrage of questions or comments about my hair. The first thing I notice is the picture of Guru Nanak. Then I sit down on the reserved seats to the left of the hall. A family with bright saffron kurtas are on the same side as me. The service starts and the priest welcomes us with a prayer. "This is our house of God. We welcome you all." "God blesses those who respect others' feelings, lifestyles and beliefs." I note out the few Christian men sitting on the other side of the aisle. All eyes are on me. The service continues. I am definitely not alone. People start exchanging marital advice. One advisee is so offended by her husband's attitude that she says she will not return for the marriage when her parents finally agree. My mind is elsewhere. I am more worried about the glances of the women sitting on the centre aisle. Women wearing saffron do not come out in public much these days. Did they ever in the past? My japa starts. "Namaste. Namaste. Namaste." I repeat those words several times as I bow to each person who bows in front of me. I fail to remember, am I bowing to the picture of Guru Nanak? Is it the religion I am a part of that makes me feel a bit ostracised? I have met some of these people and they treat me as one of them. "Love the others as you do yourself," is an oft-repeated maxim for any religion. Yet, it is hard to love someone
