It's simple to use and works extremely well, even if you're not a photographer. In the latest update, Version 2.0.2, you can now transfer your recorded videos to your Mac or PC. With the app installed, you simply need to open the photo you wish to record, point your front-facing camera towards it, and Videobox will start recording. The video will appear in your camera roll, which can be edited to your hearts content before being sent to your social media accounts. Of course, you can also save the video to your Photos album, if you wish. There are two things to bear in mind with the app: Firstly, you can only record audio if you are connected to a Wi-Fi network. If you are not, and you need to record a video, you

Fonix Skype Recorder lets you:

- Set recording intervals during the call. You can set the start and end time of the recording, and even pause recording at a specific time during the call.
- Rotate the stream to record left/right.
- View the audio stream in stereo/mono mode.
- Filter the input sound, such as Low/High/Mid-range, low-pass, high-pass, and band-pass filters.
- Combine multiple files into one.
- Record audio file to an MP3, WAV, WMA, OGG or AVI file format.
- Export audio file to an MP3, WAV, WMA, OGG or AVI format.
- Record simultaneously to multiple files.
- Add a timestamp to your recorded files.

Fonix Skype Recorder supports Skype for Business, Skype for Business Online, and Microsoft Teams. It's been a long time since I've done any reviews. However, I wanted to share some of my current favorites with you in this blog post. Spotify has been on my personal Top 3 list of music streaming services for over a year now. Although, like almost all streaming services, the quality can fluctuate. I personally like to keep my music library on another device, like my NAS or an external hard drive, so that the file quality is consistent. Spotify works for me on all platforms. The playlists and the interface are easy to navigate. Now, since they are available in multiple languages, I have been able to access music in a language I understand. The other nice feature is the availability of playlists created by
