4. Open a blank 8.5 × 11 photo and name it "Lecture Notes". The photo is pretty plain at this point. 5. Choose Edit → Fill. The Fill options appear (figure 14-6). 6. Change the Foreground Color to #33BB00, and the Background Color to white. Your fill only fills the parts that are transparent, so a large selection is needed to cover the entire image. A color wheel will help determine which colors will work best. The default colors for the foreground and background colors will probably do the job. Figure 14-6. The Preserve Transparency option may not always produce the best image. The Background Erase option can work wonders. 7. Click the Fill button to activate the fill command. The fill command erases the original image in the layer that represents the background. 8. Press the Delete key to erase the original photo. A handy trick is to put the cursor on the original photo before you click the Delete key to wipe out the existing photo. Then you can choose Edit → Undo to restore the photo to its original state. You can fill images with more than one color at a time by going to Edit → Fill and adding color stops. Color stops are identified by a circle with a small box inside (figure 14-7). When you click the circle, Photoshop creates a filled area that's defined by the position of the color inside the circle (figure 14-8). Note that when you apply a fill, only the lightest or darkest color is filled—the other colors in the fill are not. 9. Click the color stop icon on the left side of the Layers panel to activate the color stop. This illustrates the process of filling an image with three colors, one of which is white. The resulting fill is transparent, so it should be removed when all you want to do is fill the image with a solid color.

We discuss the unique situation in the United States in terms of accounting and taxation when a company is part of a larger organization. A company is required to file its taxes with the IRS rather than its parent company. If the company is located in the US and does not have any subsidiaries, then the company must file a Form 1120S, US Income Tax Return. If the company is located in one of the Freezone Countries, then the company will file a Form 1120F, Return of US Source Income.
