Even though it's not a massive update, there are several noteworthy additions to Photoshop for 2020, including improvements to image organization and Acrobat. Adobe's facial recognition technology also makes it easier to use facial recognition on an image to fine-tune a photo, then share it with Twitter, Facebook, Instagram and Messenger. Photoshop now has a new feature called the "Bring to Front" function, which enables users to quickly correct a lagging/out of focus image with a variety of smart tools, including saving the focus to a layer, getting rid of distracting elements or blurs, and fixing image straighten. Leading application development for the Mac, the Photoshop 2020 app adds previously-announced features like new camera adjustments and a new collection of videos from the 2020 creative conference, and updates to layers, features and tools. With the new 2020 app, the Paintbrush tool now has a straight line tool, and Performance tab is now a separate window instead of a thumbnail pane. The new Photoshop image anchors tool now works with Windows, too. The purpose is to deliver a quicker collection of features across all of the company's software. "Our goal with the Creative Cloud apps, and indeed worldwide innovations such as CreativeSync across all our platforms, is to facilitate the conversation between the various tools in our toolbox," said Greg Cowles, vice president of product management at Adobe. "Each piece of the puzzle contributes to that cross-platform masterpiece, but there is no performance, quality or tool integration work that can be accomplished without addressing the entirety of the solution."
