I felt something heavy in the air here, a lot of gloom and doom, although the optimism never wained. It was the last time I saw them together on stage. I think you can get a small sense of what this was like - and it felt like a continuation of what they had been giving us over the previous months in shows and interviews - through the film The Wall from 1982. The first album from Wish you were here from 1988 is an amazing, touching document of the relationship (thankfully that part of the band's history has never been made public), from the last album from them together, In the Round, out in 1999. Yet I still somehow missed the importance of this tour and the last time we all went to a similar place together (the Reading Festival in 2005). I'm just glad I was there to see them. And now, I am happy to be taking part in what is undoubtedly the greatest Floyd show ever. Looks like we might just be seeing another one in the future. Thank you for sharing your experiences and advice with us. It's well appreciated. I personally can't wait to see you guys one more time. Love you all! After half a year of work, Simon's demos (mostly vocals and bass) and an idea of how the track was to be organized, the band was ready to record the first backing track. A roving sound engineer named John Wood was hired to set up the primitive tracking studio Waters had prepared, an abandoned Victorian bathroom. The band recorded the song "What Shall We Do Now?" and some of the lyrics. We know a lot of this because John Wood's notes were later published in The Wall: Inside the Wall.

The release is very detailed and comparable to the 2013 remaster of "The Wall" album, but with more of a focus on the sound quality than enhancing brightness and contrast. The original performance of "No More Name" was improved. The instrument separation was not as good as it was in the original LP or the 2013 remaster. I've heard that some fans may prefer the 2013 remaster since the sound effects are better on the release. Pink Floyd The Wall album was released on March 31, 1979 in the United States. This is considered by many to be its definitive release. All issues of the vinyl and cassette versions contain the same songs, but the songs were remixed and a master tape was produced so that vinyls and cassettes could be made. The remaining songs on the 1981 release are different from the previous versions. Most fans listen to the 1981 release or the later vinyls. The film is well-shot and edited, though it has the same visual weaknesses as the Is There Anybody Out There documentary. The thinness and loss of detail of the 4k image works against the film. More importantly, the film cannot decide if it wants to focus primarily on Roger Waters, the man or his music.

Its quite obvious that the heart of the film lies within him but the editing makes Waters seem like a caricature of the character of a madman, rather than the human being he really is. Waters plays to the crowd like he is performing to an audience of 60,000 at the Wall, while the film undercuts him with the fleetingest glimpse of crowds during his rants about war, the Vietnam War and the role of the media in keeping people divided. The film also fails to put Waters words into a context that make a bit more sense than the flippant aside that I am happy to protest but I dont expect the government to listen. All of this detracts from the importance of the message which is on the very large screen across the stage in front of him: 5ec8ef588b
