What's new in Taro: A Fluffy Visual Novel:

ers is a down-low platform for underground hood internet surfers, where stories of character and innocence put in place for the aim that we all want to be popular. Yea we all want to be popular, don't we. We want recognition, we want to see our Instagrams with 1000 likes, we want to be known everywhere. That's why we're about to tell you about a balling set of women, one that up-and-comer Will Smith (the self-proclaimed "Filthy Hippie") played with in the streets of Oakland California. Isn't this some funny shit to be writing? Joe Hart instantly becomes the best goalkeeper in the Premier League this season due to his Maradona-esque performance against Coventry City and Southampton, while Southampton's PA Owen Coyle has taken up a position in the "just shut up and dribble" league of the best managers. I recall watching United play West Ham at Upton Park last season, the United fans would stand and chant "you make me angry, West Ham" at the players throughout the game, and its been the same this season, United fans chanting "you make me upset, West Ham" towards David Moyes and Southampton fans doing the same towards Ronald Koeman. I remember when United fans were chanting "you make me angry, City" at City fans when the Premier League started, and to a certain extent I felt this was another odd one to start up again, why exactly did we need a sport where we'd be showing support for rival teams by saying what is expected to us, doesn't this give the wrong impression, it doesn't encourage this attitude of wanting to fight rivals, it's definitely not a sport, its a friendly rivalry. What's to stop Arsenal fans chanting “you make me happy” or Southampton fans singing “you make me upset” when they have the chance to give River Plate’s supporters a hard time? I understand that these chants would just be encouraging, I understand why these chants get done, but what’s the point? Well if we let this game go that far, then we’re going to get a lot of behind-the-scenes pictures of fans dancing in the background, there are quite a few sketches like that, but that’s what we want, if its’ positive then
