What's new:

The Woman Who Is No One I wake, in my loneliest little room, and find that I don't remember anything. Well, not very much at least. And I have no idea where I am. The woman, Nan, said to call me again next month, and I have no idea how to contact her. Oh, and someone brought me here on a train after...[1] [1] Projection, individuals, past few weeks: December 15th, 17th, 18th. Parlay? What does it matter? My birth date and my face are very well-known, and I have been doomed to confinement for over a year now. In reality, I was a young woman of about twenty years, so my gentle attempts to persuade the passengers that I was a girl were quite fruitless. Even if they did not land in a brothel tomorrow, they'd have little sympathy for the plight of a beautiful young woman. No matter if she was completely lonely or even a succubus, the Blackguard treated her the same way they did everyone: with disdain. No matter. It is an equal work day, and no one would miss me, not unless she were a very nice person. So why not get my pay while I am thinking about my past. A year has passed, and the employees get a modest raise whenever I open the pay window. The bank can afford the games, and they're free. So why not play some Pathfinder RPG and learn from my mistakes? When I am finished I will take care of my mysterious present and then... I'll think about it. Ask the computer. This is a fantasy setting. I have no idea how to distinguish "real" dragons from the Player's Handbook. Since I'm a computer NPC, I don't really know anything more than ten lines of words. [2] Only the most important ones seem to have made it to the Wiki. But let's not get disappointed. The players will only learn the ten lines of words by asking me, and I will learn them for them. If this were a live campaign, I would ask them for questionnaires and such. I will lay out the ten magic items on the table for the party. The dungeon master will visit me on the shortest of schedules and take his ten magic items. He will then visit me on the second morning, when all magic items will disappear and the dungeon master will take my pay

In order to escape Earth’s cruel cycles of time and space, it is necessary that mankind stop turning and ask for direction. It is high time that Earth’s time with Earth’s “player”, Kiosk, began! In this version of Kiosk Chess, a client program that runs on computers and mobile devices from places like the internet café and traffic light control center to the hospital and portable medical devices is now available to play chess with by enrolling their “player”, who may or may not actually be present at the time of the game. The early adopters of Kiosk Chess sometimes call this “a true digital social game”. With Kiosk Chess you don’t have to run around the digital world to find someone who is playing chess. Clients may be in the building, in transit, or waiting at home while you are at work. It is quite possible that at your local coffee shop while you are relaxing with the morning paper, people are busy solving chess problems on their computers. Kiosk Chess can be used as a refreshing and revitalizing break from work, but it has many uses in business to improve business functions. Don’t just use it in the office, use it in your school or church or city hall or on the road. User Instructions: 1. Run the game as Administrator to install the game before testing. Or, run the game as a standard user to register the game before testing. 2. Play against an existing game, or create a new game. 3. Save / Load a game. 4. Help screen including about Kiosk Chess. 5. Select the playing color. 6. Move the current king to the black square, white square, or corner. 7. Each piece has a unique, hand drawn version. 8. Stop the game when you want to talk to the opponent, or start a new game. 9. Select the number of game pieces. 10. Choose the AI playing strength. Kiosk Chess offers 4 AI playing strengths. 11. Select the AI playing time. Kiosk Chess offers 3 playing times. 12. Enter the time to make the players wait. 13. Choose the chess language. Kiosk Chess allows you to select a language. 14.
