Uses the Microsoft.NET Framework classes: System.Windows.Forms and System.Drawing. Needs the Windows Live Messenger 2.0 API. Needed: This example is coded in VB.NET I updated the program by adding a bitmap and a progress bar, which allows the status to display more pictures, or the music can be played. The example can be downloaded from You can start a bitmap from the program by the line "Bitmap status.bmp" The music is played by:

"My.Resources.WLMPlaylist.mymusic" With that my example can be used I hope you like it! A: Looks like you want to make a virtual status board that pops up when a person logs in to your computer, giving them a view of what's going on while they're away. It would be nice if someone had done that already, but I'm assuming that you could probably build on that with minor modifications. Here's an example: The evening was a success. As most of you will know, I'm not big on crowds, and I dislike large gatherings. I'm more of a homebody, and I prefer to be by myself. I was simply in a wheelchair, and was not able to move. So, the NHC staff graciously offered to wheel me back to the hotel in a golf cart. It was almost midnight, and I was finally drifting off to sleep. Then I heard a familiar voice. "Yes," I said. "I'm still here." I've heard that voice before. The person continued to talk to me. "Don't worry," I said, "I'm okay." That is exactly what had happened on that long-ago day. I heard a voice, only I couldn't see the person. Another set of arms lifted me up from the wheelchair. I looked up and saw the smiling face of the man who had spoken to me that night, 39 years ago. "You're the only
