Treatment of mental illness is a complex activity requiring a multidisciplinary team of health professionals. The role of the surgeon is to offer the patient optimum surgical techniques which allow for the recovery of optimal neuropsychological functions and social integration. The surgeon also has a duty to provide a sound support in the event of postoperative complications. The existence of health issues that demand surgical treatment is as frequent in neuropsychiatric disorders as it is in other medical specialties. Moreover, the recent advances in the neurosciences permit the management of certain neuropsychiatric disorders with ever more complex surgical techniques. Hence, the interaction between the surgeon and the patient has become more and more important. The relationship between the surgeon and the patient is based on the concept of "treatment within the family". The surgeon assumes a role of educator and guide in the event of postoperative complications. Some psychiatric disorders demand the use of "postoperative psychotherapy" and the attitude of the surgeon should be adapted to the particular needs of the patient.A novel technique of modifying the accuracy of radiotherapy beams in the presence of metallic implants by using a new ionization chamber.
