Promising new study on anti-psychotic drug Seroquel The story you are about to read comes from my “real” life. The last six years, I have been fighting an unrelenting battle against bipolar disorder, since not even one, but two separate doctors have told me that I would be a suicide risk if I took the new anti-psychotic drug Seroquel. I have been on Seroquel for nearly two months now. I have been functioning normally, as well as, functioning better than I did when I was on lithium, a very toxic drug, but Seroquel is having absolutely no effect on my mania or depression. This week, I wrote down a partial list of the medication warnings that I was to read every day. The doctors who recommended Seroquel as my medicine of choice, were quick to say that Seroquel is not to be taken for any condition for which it is not proven to be safe. They were very quick to say that this medicine should not be used for weight loss, and that it should not be taken by anyone who is or could become pregnant. They are also quick to say that Seroquel causes some seizures in the first week or two of taking it, and that while it is unlikely to cause any seizures in the long run, they have never seen anyone completely leave this medicine without having at least one seizure. It is these warnings that I’m sharing with you today. In the last six months, I’ve been in and out of my family doctor’s

Easy slideshow configuration even if you have your desktop up! There’s a lot to like about Desert screensavers, but as the name suggests, they’re a little bit of a hassle to set up. Hot Deserts Free Screensaver does away with the setup process in favor of making it easier to tweak the slideshow that Hot Deserts automatically puts on your computer screen. And while we usually take the default for granted, it’s worth noting that the program offers a few system-specific configuration options, including resolution, processor usage and vertical sync. A slideshow of desert pictures taking its cue from the name, Hot Deserts Free Screensaver is an utterly simple slideshow app. You simply set its default settings, turn off the desktop and start it up. And while that might be a little disappointing, it turns out the program actually makes it effortless to tweak those default settings as well. A little less fuss, more desert. Additionally, the program can also serve as a nice companion to your desktop if it’s up. It offers some handy shortcuts to the Chrome browser, your photo library, Google Play Store and even HBO Go. Automatic direct configuration if you have it installed, you might find it in your system tray after updating to Windows 10. It’s possible to remove it if you find it annoying, but we’re assuming you’ll want to keep it. Once installed, it’s automatically set as your default screensaver, while the related system configurations panel displays. This makes it easy to initiate a fullscreen preview to see whether it suits your style or not. 5 Reasons Why Windows 10 Is The Best Windows Version Of This Decade (2017) Updated: October 18, 2017 Share Windows 10 is built on the same basis as Windows 7, 8 and 8.1.
