In an ideal world, the funeral director would be on the scene before the body is removed from the home. Most people now prefer not to die at home, and the funeral director wishes to know where the deceased is being taken. It is therefore much more convenient for you to let him or her know. If you are concerned about privacy, the funeral director will not publish any information about the location of your loved one's service. Keeping such information secret in no way affects the quality of service provided to you. The funeral director will arrange a period of privacy from family and friends who will be in attendance. You may be the only ones present to witness your life-changing event. It is not good to tell the people who will be in attendance the days and the time of your passing or what is to happen. You will both be calm and in control; you needn't worry about any last minute details. The funeral director will inform you of the location and time of your service, and he will be more than willing to give you as much information about the funeral as you like. He will inform you if you have expressed a preference for services in a church or a cemetery. The funeral director will explain how the funeral will be carried out and can even create a ceremony specific to your loved one. Although the funeral director has a lot of professional knowledge, he will defer to you in many aspects. If you have any special requirements you will be informed of them and he will be more than happy to work within your wishes. He will ask you for any preferences. As he can only do what the law allows him to do. For example, he may only be able to lay the body to rest in a style or a plot of soil. The funeral director will also ask if you want to
