What's new in Spec Ops: The Line:

Community Rating 1.00 out of 5 stars.0 total votes. This page contains Warriors of the North, Striker, Warriors segment guide. If you played Striker, please check this first. Battle Brothers have appeared twice to the games' story progress - firstly when you picked the Rescue mission for the king, then for the endgame. Their group also has a morale bonus for killing them. They also have a chance of picking Vitaly when first joining the Family, making it a very strong early point for Family fights, and capitalising on their lack of loyalty from the King's army. Music They also have a unique victory music. Attack Strengths Battle Brothers are rather squishy, good for a flank, but they have a number of weaknesses. First of all they are very bad at handling enemy heroics, unless your Unit's unit strength is fully met. Those battles are very very difficult for them. Secondly they like to flank to cause confusion to your enemy formation, but they are unable to attack and survive, unless by the edge of your enemy's terrain, where you have a good chance of protection. Thirdly, they like to move up close and deep into enemy lines, and don't mind being isolated as long as they get several units to act with. Since Brutus is a Brute, they can charge anyone they can catch. Brute's Attack Strengths Brutes are not nearly as squishy as Battle Brothers, and can have some awesome attacks. The squishiness is compensated by the fact that they have far more crew, and so act differently. In the end they tend to use their staff near as often as their spears, and their spears more often than their swords, with Cholas. First of all, their bravery is very high, and this ensures they can charge, without fear of being charged back by another Infantry. Their bravery also makes them one of the best heroes to use when charging from the back. Secondly they can be attacked from behind, and tend to use themselves as buffers against enemy cavalry, and so their fears of attack are nullified. Thirdly they are the best cavalry to charge Infantry, and are really great when attacking Infantry (if you can find them). But their most important ability is their ability to attack from far, far away. This causes a lot of confusion in a combat.
