You may have never heard of the video game Monster Truck Madness and you may not have heard a single "Tilt A Truck" song in your life. That's the truth. Now, Monster Truck Madness is one of the first games I remember playing on the PlayStation 1 and back when it first came out, it was a real challenge for me as a young boy. I remember having to stick my head over the edge of the couch as I would tilt the control and try to control the monster truck that was racing through the track. The game was pretty simple. You had a monster truck and you had a monster monster truck. The goal was to run into the other tracks monster truck, knock them out, and then you would go on to the next level. But, you weren't trying to win. You were just trying to get to the end of the race, and there were a lot of points to be earned through racing. Buy Tickets You would also have to earn money to continue playing the game. You earned money by picking up keys. Keys picked up a $25, $50, and $100 which I believe was the maximum amount that you could earn. So, if you picked up a $100 key, you'd get $200 in your pocket. And, the way you got a key was to run over the right bumper and the monster truck would pickup a key. You would then wait to get the next level that was more difficult, and you'd have to run over the bumper and the monster truck would pick up the key. You ran over the bumper a lot of times, and you would pick up a lot of money. So, if you were having trouble making money or wanting to get back in the game to earn some more money, you could spend money on upgrades. So, you'd go and buy the best bumper, the most powerful engine, and the best tires. So, let's just take a look at what the monster truck looked like in Monster Truck Madness. First, you have the monster truck on top of a green, oval bumper. The bumper was your gas tank as you needed to let out a certain amount of gas to continue to race. You also had a front bumper if you wanted to keep speeding through the track. It's the same idea that a monster truck has a front bumper to go over the competition in a race. The engine is the heart of the beast, and this monster truck has a small, blue engine. And
