Create static webpages and online documentation using templates This particular application can be used for building the structure of a static website, no matter its purpose. It can cater to users who need to create personal webpages or blogs, as well as those who want to build an online documentation system for their product. To make things even easier, it comes with a collection of templates and example content that can become the starting point of creating a customized full-featured webpage. Automatically generates the HTML code for you Aside from templates, DA-HelpCreator brings to the table predefined navigation systems, breadcrumb navigation and automatically-generated menu bars for browsing through the pages of a website. There is no need to write a single line of code, as DA-HelpCreator generates these elements automatically. The project tree allows you to navigate throughout the pages of your project, while the editor can be used for editing the content of each page. The application uses Markdown and HTML together, so you can insert HTML tags or use macro functions to create elements. DA-HelpCreator takes care of creating the HTML code and linking the pages according to your site map. Build static webpages and online documentation in an easy manner DA-HelpCreator can be used for creating static webpages and online documentation with a responsive design that is optimized for both mobile (Bootstrap) and desktop platforms. For your convenience, the much-needed navigation menus, the table of contents and the sitemap are also generated automatically. In other words, this application manages to help you design simple pages and blogs without too much effort.

const assert = require('assert'); const indexer = require('./'); describe('preload', function() { it('should contain the source of the current file', function() { const result = indexer.preload(__filename); assert.equal(result.path, __filename); }); it('should have its parent be the directory of the current file', function() {
