Thursday, November 13, 2008 Do you know what it's like to wake up the morning after the birth of your baby and have absolutely no idea what the baby looks like? Well, I did, so I know. Of course, it's not like it was exactly like that for me, but I did have the same sort of crazy I'm NOT GETTING UP NOW CRAZY. It was the first time I'd ever had a baby and I'd never seen her before, but it was pretty obvious that she was one of those big ones. So I got dressed, took her to the park and played with her, fed her, put her down for a nap, went to a friend's to play some video games and watch movies, and in a totally twisted version of reality, would have been perfectly content to go back to that movie and play some more, possibly until the wee hours of the morning. In any event, I had about fifteen minutes of that crazy before exhaustion set in and I had to get ready for work. So when I opened my eyes the next morning and there was an enormous baby in my room, I was just so happy to see it that I didn't even really have a reaction at first. I've actually said in interviews that I felt like I'd been cheated somehow because I didn't get to wake up to an overwhelming feeling of bliss. But there was no real reason why I shouldn't see it at least once. It would be sort of like peeing on your wedding dress, but the Lord works in mysterious ways. This morning, standing in line for the bathroom, she was born the night before and is already getting bigger. My stomach is sticking out like an old shoe, which I really wouldn't have minded if I hadn't slept wearing only my underwear... but there she is, and I'm sure everyone's staring. I'm not going to sleep in the same room as her, though. As much as I would love to have her sleeping next to me f988f36e3a
