The subunit structure of glucokinase. Glucokinase is a bifunctional enzyme which catalyzes the phosphorylation of glucose. We have purified glucokinase from rat liver cytosol and shown that it contains two nonidentical subunits, with apparent molecular weights of 31,000 and 38,000. Sulfhydryl groups at subunit interfaces of the enzyme are labile during purification to the extent of about 50% and the enzyme appears to form oligomers. The 31,000 Mr subunit is associated with the 38,000 Mr subunit but not with the substrate. The enzyme forms complexes with nucleotides which are sensitive to hydroxylamine, suggesting the presence of a nucleoside-binding site. Nucleotides may alter the conformation of the enzyme and thereby regulate its enzymatic activity. Evidence is presented that both subunits are derived from the same gene product but the high Mr subunit may be present in a methylated form in some cell types. ♦ I don't think Tom Brady is the greatest of all time, but I do think he's the greatest of the last 20 years."
