Photoshop CS5 Crack

Of course, with the digital revolution, everyone has Photoshop, and some people use it a lot more than they use Adobe's other image-editing programs. In this chapter, I focus on the most common uses of Photoshop. If you have an inkjet printer or are about to buy one, the chapter shows you how to print multiple identical images on both sides of a single sheet of paper. Using Photoshop for Photo Retouching Retouching (or restyling) a photo is the most common use of Photoshop. You can make minor changes, create an entirely new image, or combine two separate photos to make one photo. The following sections walk you through the process of retouching a photo. Retouching a photo This section tells you how to retouch a photo in different ways: You can fix a subject's skin complexion, remove background objects, and even add or remove an object from the picture. Before you start the retouching process, make sure that you follow the steps in the preceding sections "Creating a Photo Retouching Template" and "Creating a Retouching Project." Working with layers and working with masks Photoshop's editing system works on multiple layers. When you work with layers, you build up your image by adding new layers to the Photoshop workspace and then adjust the individual layers' properties. And then you use the Layer Mask feature to hide or show the specific areas of the layers, such as the eyes, nose, or entire head. (See Chapters 5–7 for more about layers and masks.) Setting up your workspace and creating a retouching project It's essential to set up your Photoshop workspace correctly before you begin retouching a photo. Chapter 4 lays out a detailed picture of how to use Photoshop's workspace, but I provide a short version here. Here's what you need to do: 1. Make sure that you have a new image opened in the program. 2. Create a new Photoshop document (File ⇒ New). 3. Enter a title for the new image (see the section "Create a New Image"). 4. Click the New Layer icon (the plus sign with the number zero) in the Toolbox, and then choose Layers from the menu that appears. (See the section "Creating a Layer Mask" for more about the Layer Mask option.) 5. Create a new layer.
