Incubation of red blood cells (RBCs) with acetic acid produces photochemically induced glucose release that is mediated by singlet oxygen. It has been reported that the glucose release is not the same in all the RBCs; that is, the size of the RBC is not the only determinant of the glucose release. The present experiments investigated whether the amount of hemoglobin is also an important factor. The amount of hemoglobin per RBC (measured as both the hemoglobin content and absorbance at 415 nm) was not correlated with the glucose release. The ratio of the absorbance at 415 nm to hemoglobin (A415/Hb) decreased with increasing concentration of acetic acid and was shown to correlate with the amount of glucose released. Thus, 79a2804d6b
