Intercultural communities (ICs) are communities that facilitate the study of a culture, productively teach/learn critical thinking, and foster a learning environment that "empowers" the intercultural and culturally diverse learner. As nurse educators in the 21st century, we are increasingly called upon to design and provide learning experiences that do not exclude students from learning opportunities and that, ideally, attract students of diverse racial and ethnic backgrounds. The purpose of this research was to describe the learning experiences of a unique intercultural community on a midwestern United States nursing college campus and to compare the learning experiences of first-year international students to those of American students. The research design was comparative-descriptive. The setting was 04aeff104c
